Reduce Stress + Increases Employees Productivity

A number of studies have been conducted that indicate indoor plants can reduce stress levels in work environments. Washington State University researchers found that study participants' blood pressure levels were lower when plants were present in the interior. Study participants also reported feeling more attentive in the room containing plants. Multiple other studies have produced evidence that stress levels are reduced by the presence of plants and even improve productivity among office workers.

Biophilia – Need for Nature

Biophilia, is used described humanity's innate need for nature. It is hardly surprising that numerous members of offices have adopted a similar philosophy. The need to return to nature is as natural as the "cycle of life
